RESEARCH INTERESTS

I study behavioral ethics in organizations. I am especially interested in understanding why normally good people would do unethical things and in the influence of moral emotions on judgment and behavior. My interest in behavioral ethics in part grew out of my earlier research on worker safety. I am also interested in research methods, particularly the ways in which agreement across people can be conceptualized, quantified, and interpreted. These issues are broadly applicable to research methodologies such as multilevel research and coding.
